BACKGROUND AND ANALYSIS:
As a result of changes to state law in the past few years, the California Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) and the Attorney General now have broader authority to enforce state housing laws and initiate litigation. In addition, third party organizations are spending more time and resources monitoring municipal decisions and filing lawsuits with respect to those decisions.

Finally, state law changes also have increased the potential consequences of such lawsuits.

For example, HCD issued a Notice of Violation to the City, stating that the City Council's decision not to approve the proposed housing development project located on Rosecrans and Highland ("Highrose Project" or "Project") violated state housing laws. HCD has demanded that the City Council reconsider the Project. In addition, the Project's property owner has sued the City, and housing advocacy groups have threatened litigation if the City Council does not rehear the Project.

If adopted, the attached resolution and ordinances will help the City respond promptly to the Notice of Violation and the broader changes of state law.
